NTU ENGINEERING RANKS FOURTH IN THE WORLD

For aspiring engineers looking for a top-notch degree from a world-class university, a homegrown institution beckons. Singapore's Nanyang Technological University (NTU) has been ranked 4th worldwide in Engineering and Technology in the latest QS World University Rankings by faculty.

Placed 6th in Electrical and Electronic Engineering, and 7th in Materials Science globally, Dean of Engineering Professor Chen Tsuhan said that it is with the “innovative programmes, international faculty, and strong ties with industry” that “NTU Engineering continues its upward momentum, going ahead of some of the world’s top universities.”

One of the top engineering programmes in Singapore is the dual-degree Renaissance Engineering Programme that promises a Bachelor of Engineering Science and a post-graduate Master of Science in Technology Management within 4.5 years. Highly sought after by top A-level students, this unique programme allows students to spend one year at top overseas universities or participate in overseas internships.

Prof Chen added that engineering offers a path into many exciting careers.

"With Singapore’s Smart Nation ambitions and also with the global search for solutions to cope with the silver tsunami that many developing nations are facing, there will be a great demand for engineering expertise," he said.
